As of 2020, Photoshop has been around for over 20 years. Throughout all these years of the program being around, it has made no attempts to provide a more user-friendly or intuitive user interface. Even so, with the release of Photoshop CS6, Adobe has made some significant improvements to its user interface. The new interface was so successful that Adobe has brought it to other programs like Photoshop Elements and Photoshop Creative Cloud. This comprehensive guide will cover the basics of the interface, advanced features that are new to Elements, and how to perform some of the most common tasks in your workflow. We will include a few tips for how to transfer work from Photoshop to Photoshop Elements. Updated: September 2019 Steps to Open a File To open a new file in Photoshop Elements, simply double-click on the file you wish to open. You can create masks by applying a black-and-white or color filter to an area of your image. Using the mask, you can mask unwanted areas and make them transparent. Bitmaps—also called raster graphics—are, quite simply, images made from shapes of pixels. A bitmap is often used to store a photo or a drawing. Brush is a single-use brush tool used to paint. You can get creative with it and make your own brush stroke patterns. Brush Tool controls the softness of the pressure as you paint. You use the pressure slider to set how hard or soft you press the buttons as you paint. The Pen tool is a brush tool with a pen-like tip. You can draw freehand, making a design, or you can draw with different preset fill and stroke colors. You can change the size, shape, and style of the brush. Once you have the brush just right, you can use the Brush tool in Flowing Text by pressing the L key to enter Live Paint. The Heal tool uses a small brush to repaint areas of an image that are damaged, broken, or faded. You can refine the size and complexity of the brush to get the perfect fix. The Knife Tool is a tool with a small brush-like tip. You can paint with the Knife tool in some cases by clicking with the cursor. However, it can also be used to cut out objects from another image. You can get creative with the Brush tool. You can use preset brush settings or you can change the settings to change the shape of the brush. This is useful when you have a specific look in mind. The Blur Tool is a basic tool that blurs an image. In doing so, you also reduce its resolution. You can choose from many different presets or you can make your own. You can use the Eraser tool for erasing the surrounding pixels of an area of your image. Simply click on the unwanted area, and the Eraser tool will remove any pixels that aren't the same color as the pixel you click on. You can use the Burn tool to burn or darken the edges of an image. This is a good way to make an image darker. The Gaussian Blur Filter makes an image blurrier. If you apply a Gaussian Blur to a photo that has clear edges, it will distort the edges. The Clone Stamp is the most common tool for repairing images

Q: Linux Socket Programming: socket-send-block-errors I'm working on a project that uses a socket server, something like this: `int socket_fd; ... socket_fd = socket(...); err = socket_connect(...); while(...) { retval = socket_recv(...); retval = socket_send(...); }` On my Debian 3.2.26 (warty) system, I've been getting the "socket-send-block-errors" warnings about every 100 or so messages. I've read all about "duplex sockets" and other ports, but I'm really lost. I would also like to know if anyone has a link to a good tutorial on learning Socket Programming (on Linux) without all the other sockets[-{!}voodoo]. Any other general tips on the warnings (What is causing them and how can I avoid them), or even the functionality (Does this warning even mean what I think it means?) would be greatly appreciated, thanks. A: These messages are basically coming from program. That's not an error. Anyway, they should happen in one-to-one operation, i.e. your program sends data to the socket the remote server receives data from the socket. In your example case you send 100 times and the program receive 20 times. That's not an exact one-to-one correspondence. That's the same in TCP, UDP and IP. Except that the remote server can receive data even when the program doesn't send a packet to the remote server. That's normal when the remote server takes more than 100ms to receive the last packet. Anyway, this is all about TCP, but the other protocols work the same. In order to improve what your program is doing, a good suggestion is to use more than one connection and set the buffer to very big. For example, you can write 100 MB of data in the buffer of your socket. Then, after that, you send the data. The remote server will receive it only if he or she have space in the buffer, if not it won't receive the data. After that, the remote server sends a status that it's receiving data. Your program will receive this message and do something with it (like retry) and sends data.
