Evidence for a syndromic association between enlarged sebaceous lobule and cytomegalovirus infection in a middle-aged woman. An extremely rare case of 'apocrine adenoid giant sebaceous lobule' associated with cytomegalovirus infection and a review of the literature are presented. To our knowledge, this is the first case of the sebaceous lobule occurring in an adult female. The sebaceous lobule was incidentally found during a skin biopsy for trauma and was not noted as a disease entity in any previous reports. Histologically the lesion showed proliferation of the apocrine sweat glands with abundant intracytoplasmic luminal keratin, which was immunopositive for cytokeratin 7. The epithelium of the lesion was otherwise well-differentiated and histologically resembled an apocrine adenoid. The adjacent sebaceous glands and the cutaneous adnexae were normal. Based on the clinical and histopathological features, a diagnosis of apocrine adenoid giant sebaceous lobule is proposed. With regard to the association between the sebaceous lobule and cytomegalovirus infection, it is proposed that the sebaceous lobule could be viewed as an intra-epidermal analogue of the intra-abdominal epidermoid cyst.
